Big Thinkers and Builders
Votem

Dear Votem Team,

I'm excited to be applying to join your team as a UI/UX Designer. I've followed Votem for some time now, and I'm impressed at what you've been able to achieve. I think I'd be a strong asset to help you empower and enable secure mobile voting.

Over the past 13 years, I've planned and built software products, bridging the space between technical and creative teams through user-focused design. Finding work that inspires me has always been important, and I've been lucky enough to help entrepreneurs build their MVPs, create massive online games, service big consumer goods brands, and even assist with lifelike animatronic robots. I feel driven now to take my next step and join an organization where I can be part of a team; learning and growing myself while pushing and teaching my teammates through collaboration.

It's tough to imagine a bigger or more important goal than bringing elections into the modern world. The holistic design and UX approach Votem is striving for, where everything from the initial sign up to service offerings to the interfaces is rendered with clarity and accessibility inspires me. I try to carry similar ideas through in my own recent work with small startups; I'm often creating branding and guidelines to accompany a UI simply because they wouldn't have anything otherwise and that's just not good enough. It's not about ego or seeking validation, but about making the best product you can within the constraints.

I look forward to speaking with you soon and learning more about becoming a part of Votem.

Sincerely,

Eric Browning
