Dear AHM Team,

I'm excited to be applying to join your team in the UI/UX role. I've recently learned more about AHM and continued.com and your mission, and I'm impressed at what you've been able to achieve. I know I'd be a great asset to help you enhance the online learning experience.

Over the past 12 years, I've planned and built software products, bridging the space between technical and creative teams through user-focused design. Finding work that inspires me has always been important, and I've been lucky enough to help entrepreneurs build their MVPs, create massive online games, service big consumer goods brands, and even assist with lifelike animatronic robots. I feel driven now to take my next step and join an organization where I can be part of a team; learning and growing myself while pushing and teaching my teammates through collaboration.

I recently helped launch a tablet application for Hearthstone Alzheimer care which was a challenging project, but I'm proud of the results. This grant-funded application was designed for caregivers to use with their clients; engaging them with simple activities and exercises which would spark conversations. There were a number of accessibility challenges and technical issues, but by working with their research team I was able to design and build the front end, which is currently in private testing and usage by their staff.

You can learn more about the Hearthstone application and other sample work at <http://fiveoclockfriday.com/reliable-excellent>.

Based on the requirements you've posted and my research from discussions with some other companies, I believe a salary of $110,000 - $115,000 annually is a fair range.

I'm a simple guy when it comes to YouTube videos, and I've always loved this classic example of dog being a dog (reminds me of our dog's personality!) <https://youtu.be/5iTTNRE-njM?t=51s>.

Sincerely,

Eric Browning
